MASSACRE madman Anders Breivik wrote a chilling manifesto explaining his evil mission of slaughter, it was revealed yesterday.

In 1,500 hate-filled pages, the warped Norwegian declared war on Muslims and left-wingers — and threatened to help bring down Western civilisation by the year 2083.

Breivik — who honed his terror skills at camps run by neo-Nazis called The Vikings — told how he built an arsenal of guns and kept a huge explosives cache at an isolated farm.

His manifesto contained a diary spelling out the final three months of preparation for last Friday's bombing and shooting in Norway in which at least 93 people died.

The last entry — made three hours before his 500kg fertiliser car bomb exploded outside PM Jens Stoltenberg's office in Oslo — declared: "It is all or nothing."

Callous Breivik, 32 — who then gunned down scores of youths at a camp on Utoya Island — told in an earlier entry how he went on gun-buying sprees and bought soft-nosed dum-dum bullets "for inflicting maximum damage to vermin".

His rantings — showing the slaughter was the climax of a NINE-YEAR masterplan of hatred — were partly penned in London.

And sources claimed Breivik had links to the far-right English Defence League through its Norwegian sister organisation.

SCOTLAND Yard is probing links between neo-Nazi monster Anders Breivik and Right-wing extremists in Britain, it was revealed last night.

The white supremacist, who killed 76 innocents in Norway on Friday, has said he was recruited by two English fanatics in London in 2002.

In a 1,500-page "murder manifesto", he also said he began planning the gun and bomb attacks while there.

And Breivik, 32, mentions a British mentor named Richard. Met Police counter-terrorism officers are investigating the claims and have sent one of their men to Norway.

Yesterday the killer gloated over his slaughter, saying: "In a generation or two, people will thank me."
